Looks Like Daylight: Voices of Indigenous Kids is a powerful and moving collection of stories, poems, and artwork by Indigenous children from across Canada. These young voices share their experiences of growing up in a world that is often hostile to Indigenous peoples. They speak of the challenges they face, the resilience they have developed, and the hope they have for the future.

The book is divided into four sections: "Stories", "Poems", "Artwork", and "Voices". The stories are personal narratives that explore a wide range of topics, from the everyday experiences of Indigenous children to the more difficult issues they face, such as racism, poverty, and discrimination. The poems are lyrical and evocative, and they capture the beauty and resilience of the Indigenous spirit. The artwork is visually stunning, and it provides a unique glimpse into the world of Indigenous children.

The "Voices" section of the book features interviews with Indigenous children from across Canada. These interviews provide a platform for the children to share their thoughts and feelings about the issues that are important to them. They speak about the importance of education, the need for reconciliation, and their hopes for the future.

Looks Like Daylight is a powerful and important book that gives voice to the Indigenous children of Canada. These young voices offer a unique and valuable perspective on the challenges and opportunities facing Indigenous peoples in the 21st century.
