Bly's career began in 1887 when she responded to a challenge by the editor of the New York World, Joseph Pulitzer, to write an exposé on the conditions at the notorious Blackwell's Island Asylum for the Insane. Disguising herself as a mentally ill patient, Bly spent ten days undercover, enduring the appalling treatment and inhumane conditions that the inmates faced. Her harrowing account of her experiences, published in a series of articles titled "Ten Days in a Mad-House," shocked the nation and led to significant reforms in the asylum system.

Bly's reputation as a fearless reporter was further cemented in 1889 when she embarked on a daring adventure to break the record for the fastest trip around the world. Inspired by Jules Verne's novel "Around the World in Eighty Days," Bly set out on a solo journey, determined to complete the circumnavigation in less than 80 days. Her journey was fraught with challenges, including canceled trains, missed connections, and hostile weather. But with her signature determination, she persevered, completing the trip in a record-breaking 72 days, six hours, and 11 minutes.

Bly's account of her extraordinary journey, published in the New York World as a series of articles, captivated readers worldwide. It not only made her a household name but also inspired countless women to pursue their own dreams and ambitions.
